

Grid Guessing (Each person should have their own sheet)

Place a dot pattern in the small squares and then see if your partner can guess where you put the dots. Give them a nod only in response to their questions. See if they can make their grid look just like yours without seeing yours.

Dialogue may sound like this:
"First row, first square 1?" shake head
"Second row, first square 1?" Shake head
"First row, second square 1?" shake head
"First row, third square 1?" nod head "yes"

Hold this grid in you hand and if the person walking the the grid makes an error by Stepping on a square that is not marked in red, send them back to the begining and let and let the try again.

Options: Instead of dots, you can try letters, numbers, or a pathway (see illustration sheets). You can also place a grid (chalk or tape) on the ground and see if they can guess what pattern you have by stepping on to the grid. When they make a mistake (step on the wrong square) you ask them to start all over again and hope that they do not make another mistake, or they will have to start from the beginning again retracing the correct steps that they have learned so far. If you use this like a game, it is fun to see who learns the pattern first. © 2020 BrilliantTherapy.com
